Heidegger, born in south-west Germany in 1889, was a darker kind of wizard, and urged that we leap into the nothingness that stares us in the face. We must, he argued, grasp the project of being in the world (Dasein – being there), alone and unsupported by old metaphysical certainties, anxiously but authentically. Benjamin, born in

Emmanuel Levinas (Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy)

Arendt's distinctive approach as a political thinker can be understood from the impetus drawn from Heidegger's "phenomenology of Being." She proceeds neither by an analysis of general political concepts (such as authority, power, state, sovereignty, etc.) traditionally associated with political philosophy, nor by an aggregative
