This method of curing meat is perhaps the oldest. The meat is allowed to ferment and dry out over a period of time, resulting in a form of sausage that doesn't need to be cooked. The cure is integrated fully with the meat, rather than being applied to the surface, so the meat needs to be minced or finely chopped to allow the cure to work effectively.

Ffarquhar is Thomas' favourite station. This was revealed in the fifth series episode, Baa! The name "Ffarquhar" is a made-up word derived from "Far-away quarry" by the Rev. W. Awdry and his brother George. They originally devised the word in 1928 for the terminus of a model railway they never completed.<sup>3</sup> In the television series, the station building has the same structure as the southern

As with all cured meats, though, some specialized ingredients are involved, like dextrose, curing salt (also known as Insta Cure or Prague powder), and casings. Curing salt contains sodium nitrite and sodium nitrate, which stave off the development of the bacteria that cause botulism, and is therefore essential to the safety of this recipe.
